Review game for tonic, subdominant, and dominant

To the teacher: read the story out loud (slowly!) to your students (most fun in a group), and have them “translate”. E.g. “Subdominant-te” = four-te = forte

Tonic day, I decided to go subdominant a walk around the neighbourhood. I love my tonic-derful neighbourhood, because it’s a good place subdominant kids and subdominant adults. I saw and heard dominant tonic-derful things. Number tonic was something that was making a subdominant-te sound: the ice cream truck. There was something subdominant everyone: vanilla, chocolate, butterscotch ripple, and dominant-berry. The next tonic-derful thing was a park with a great playground subdominant kids. Tonic girl was so happy that she’d tonic a race with her friends that she was jumping subdominant joy. The third thing was a garden with subdominant-teen beautiful rosebushes and subdominant-ty-dominant blooming roses. Number subdominant was a family of ducks with dominant cute ducklings, going subdominant a walk! Do you tonic-der what number dominant on my list is? The last tonic-derful thing I saw was a juggler who balanced on tonic foot while he juggled three, subdominant, and finally dominant balls. I tonic-dered how he could do it!

(Translation: One day, I decided to go for a walk around the neighbourhood. I love my wonderful neighbourhood, because it’s a good place for kids and for adults. I saw and heard five wonderful things. Number one was something that was making a forte sound: the ice cream truck. There was something for everyone: vanilla, chocolate, butterscotch ripple, and five-berry. The next wonderful thing was a park with a great playground for kids. One girl was so happy that she’d won a race with her friends that she was jumping for joy. The third thing was a garden with fourteen beautiful rosebushes and forty-five blooming roses. Number four was a family of ducks with five cute ducklings, going for a walk! Do you won-der what number five on my list is? The last wonderful thing I saw was a juggler who balanced on one foot while he juggled three, four, and finally five balls. I wondered how he could do it!
